Navy Announces FY-04 Early Transition Program

Sailors interested in leaving the Navy before the end of their active obligated service (EAOS) will get another chance this year under a second installment of the Early Transition Program.

The program, announced this week in NAVADMIN 151/04, allows Sailors with an EAOS in fiscal year 2005 the opportunity to separate this fiscal year. Like last year's program, it is strictly voluntary and applies to Sailors in most skill sets. But this time around Sailors will be allowed to separate up to 12 months early, as opposed to the six months early out offered last year.

"For Sailors with impending educational or civilian career plans, this program could offer just the extra time and opportunity they need to get started on a new life," explained Vice Adm. Gerry Hoewing, Chief of Naval Personnel. "I am delighted that this great retention we are continuing to experience has allowed us to offer the program again this year."

Sailors of any rating (including non-designated Sailors) are eligible except for the following:

- Sailors under a Selective Reenlistment Bonus (SRB) or in a rating/NEC [Navy Enlisted Classification Code] eligible for SRB reenlistment.
- Sailors in the SEAL/EOD/Diver/SWCC programs.
- Sailors in nuclear ratings.

Sailors can begin submitting requests immediately via the chain of command to Navy Personnel Command. All separations under this program must be effected by Sept. 15.

For more information refer to NAVADMIN 151/04, available soon on the Web at www.bupers.navy.mil, or contact your command career counselor

Rules Restrict Political Activity for DoD People

With election activity steadily picking up, defense officials remind members of the military and Defense Department civilians that they're subject to rules regulating their involvement in political activities.

Two sets of rules help protect the integrity of the political process: a DoD directive for active-duty service members and the Hatch Act for federal civilians. These rules keep the military out of partisan politics and ensure that the workplace remains politically neutral. That's not to imply that military members and civilian employees can't participate in politics. The DoD encourages both groups to register to vote and vote as they choose, and to urge others to vote.

Both groups can sign nominating petitions for candidates and express their personal opinions about candidates and issues - but only if they don't do so as representatives of the armed forces. Also, all federal employees can make contributions to political organizations or candidates.

MCPON Discusses Task Force Uniform

In two recent All Hands Calls at Naval Base Kitsap, Wash., and Naval Supply Systems Command in Mechanicsburg, Pa., Master Chief Petty Officer of the Navy Terry Scott talked with Sailors about many Navy quality of life issues, most notably Task Force Uniform (TFU).

One of the first questions Sailors asked was about the status of TFU. "Our Sailors are saying what we have isn't working," Scott said. "I don't want our Sailors to break out an iron to wear a working uniform."

According to Scott, the original concept of TFU was derived from an initiative from Sailors in the Pacific Northwest. Sailors have said that they want a single year-round working uniform and a single year-round service uniform. Scott says TFU is working to find the right uniform for the one Navy team concept.

Scott said that in the near future, the uniform regulations would reflect a more common-sense approach to some of the accessories that are worn with the Navy uniform. He believes females should be able to choose their own style of purse within certain guidelines, and since pagers have all but become obsolete, he wants to change the current rule to include cell phones and other communication devices.

Scott explained that the process of collecting data, and compiling feedback from the fleet to build the concept uniforms for fleet-wide wear testing is right on track.

"The reason Sailors have not seen prototype uniforms out in the fleet yet, is because we are concentrating on getting the design and wear-test process down right, and not rushing just to get something out there," Scott said. "Our approach is - and is going to remain - very deliberate. I think there is tremendous value to this approach - gathering input from Sailors in the fleet, as well as partnering with industry to use the most innovative ways to make sure we do this correctly."

The Chief of Naval Operations directed the pilot and testing of a new year-round service uniform for E-6 and below, as well as a new working uniform for E-1 through O-10. Within the next year, the pilot programs will be run in various locations throughout the Fleet, to include Sailors in various communities at sea, ashore, overseas and in different climates.

"Navy uniforms are a very emotional issue, and we're talking about changes that are going to be with us for a very long time. If your grandchildren one day enlist in the Navy, they will most likely be wearing these uniforms. We need to keep that long-term perspective on this very important initiative."

Beating the Heat in GTMO - Whether it's applying sunscreen or playing with your kids in the blow-up paddle pool, the residents of GTMO are always looking and finding great ways to cool off and protect themselves from the hot summer weather.

Some GTMO residents take sun protection seriously. This young man opted for a cardboard box with an SPF of 99.4 percent to protect his face from a potential sunburn.

The Guantanamo Bay Fire Department recently brought out the "big guns" to cool off children attending the Youth Center's summer camp. The department's Summer Fun Safety program is in full swing and while having a little fun the firefighters teach fire safety. This year the Fire Department educated over 200 children on fire safety.

Wind Turbines Arrive in GTMO

The United States Navy has partnered with NORESKO, an energy services company, to install, finance and maintain wind turbines at U.S. Naval Base Guantanamo Bay, Cuba (GTMO). This Navy Energy Savings Performance Contract (ESPC) is a financed energy project that is paid out of the energy cost savings generated by the turbines.

The four wind turbines will each generate 950 kilowatts of electricity (3,900 kw total), and will supply about 25 percent of the peak power needed to operate the base. In years of normal weather, the wind turbines will produce almost 8 million kilowatt-hours of electricity.

Since 1974, the Navy has been investigating the use of wind turbines for reducing nonrenewable energy consumption at their facilities. At San Clemente Naval Air Station, a small island off the California coast, the Navy installed wind turbines that began producing electricity in 1997.

NORESKO has already completed a comprehensive program to install more efficient lighting and water fixtures throughout the base. This work, and other energy conservation initiatives in GTMO, were accomplished through a joint effort between NORESKO, GTMO Navy Public Works Department, the Navy Region Southeast Energy Office, and the Navy ESPC Team. In recognition of the success toward energy efficiency, GTMO was awarded the U.S. Department of the Navy 2003 Platinum Level Award for excellence in their energy conservation program.

This is the largest wind turbine project undertaken to date by the Navy. The power produced will reduce the consumption of 650,000 gallons of diesel fuel each year, and will reduce air pollutants and greenhouse gas emissions by over 13 million pounds per year.

The blades of the wind turbines have a diameter of 175 feet. Once complete, the wind turbines themselves will stand 185 feet tall.

GTMO's wind turbines are to be located on John Paul Jones Hill and will be visible throughout the base and surrounding Cuban area.

Construction is anticipated to be complete by the end of 2004 and the wind turbines should be fully operational by February 2005.

The Stage by M. Q. Jackson

Soft settled rainbow flowers
Backdrops the window
As she stood quietly gazing out at the stage
Performers stood by
Tears without eyes to cry
Mechanical birds soared the sky
With the intent to honorably die

The Towers came fallen down
Dancers danced the rhythm of chaotic sound
Mournful was the town
The cast lied still the stage
Tri-colored garment burned celebrating the rage

Gunfire in celebration
Gunfire for devastation
Guns fired 21 salutes in commemoration

The narrator speaks
For every tear that silently dropped
The curtains closed to set up new props

Wet waters and duty trails
Evil in the air let God prevail
Fire burning black clouds of smoke

Black gold says the joke
Stingers flying by piercing the skin
A feel of homelessness
Wondering if they will ever see home again
Cannons blaring toward foreign land
Young men and women cry
Because they didn't understand

Safe is the narrator tonight
Watching outside the stage
Watching the performers blindly fight
Giving birth in the sky
Falling to the stage killing everyone standing by

New scene new prop
New mission on communist rock
Bound in chains spiritual believers
Praying non-stop

Dark wilting flowers
Backdrops the window
As she stood grieving
Toward the stage
ENDURING FREEDOM!

GTMO Sailor Publishes Inspirational Poetry

People write for various reasons – they enjoy creating, they need to get things off their chest, they want to encourage and inspire others. CS1 Marcus Jackson of U.S. Naval Hospital, Guantanamo Bay, writes for these reason and more. In his recently published book of poetry entitled I Closed My Eyes, Jackson hopes to encourage and inspire others with his words.

“Putting my thoughts onto paper helps me to better understand what I’m feeling inside,” said Jackson, who has been writing since junior high school. “Writing is therapeutic, and I like sharing it with the world.”

I Closed my Eyes is a collection of poetry Jackson has written over a two-year period. “In the beginning, I was writing as a hobby, without the intent of publishing,” said Jackson. “Those who read my book will get a raw sense of honesty.”

Readers of the book will be able to sense the personal nature and honesty of Jackson’s poems, with themes ranging from hope and banishing insecurity, to how to give pain a shape in order to better recognize and deal with it.

I Closed My Eyes is described by Jackson as a book that gives “personal, as well as therapeutic, literature to the reader rhythmically, with the hope of a new tomorrow, stitching torn esteem, and renovating damaged confidence.”

Jackson writes about life and the powerful emotions that almost all people have dealt with. He says he tries to pull his readers into the work, writing in such a way that the reader feels as if he is speaking directly to him or her.

The inspiration for the title of Jackson’s book comes from a time when shutting out thoughts was an easy way to avoid accepting the reality he was facing. Through poetry and writing, Jackson managed to transform a state of shutting out reality into one of focusing within. His introspection or “closing his eyes” inspired him to face reality.

What else inspires Jackson? In a word, “life.” As a proud parent, Jackson credits his son, Mekhi Jamal, for daily inspiration and strength.

The Reddick, Fla., native also mentions his Navy career as an inspiration. Jackson said he joined the Navy 15 years ago to travel and search for a better tomorrow. He feels his Navy life may have helped his writing by exposing him to the different cultures and backgrounds of others.

I Close my Eyes is available for purchase online and from Jackson himself. To view samples from the book, log onto www.trafford.com/robots/04-0898.html. Jackson is currently working on his second volume of poetry entitled Don’t Call Me a Cowboy Until You See Me Ride.

If you would like to experience Jackson’s poetry firsthand, you can watch him perform during Friday Poetry Nights at Iguana Crossing on Chapel Hill. “When you just want to chill, come and listen to the lines of poetry Jackson has to lay down,” says AT1 Tonya McKinnie, Naval Station Admin Department. According to McKinnie, you will be able to enjoy recitals of his written work, as well as impromptu freestyle poetry accompanied by bongos and other rhythmic instruments.

One Source Helps Solve Service Member, Family Member Problems

"I want to thank Navy One Source and Marjorie for the help they gave me in finding assistance for my elderly mother. Marjorie was helpful and reassuring in a time of crisis. With her help, I was able to solve a problem causing me a lot of stress. Thanks One Source." – a Navy family member, Pensacola, Fla.

Navy One Source is a new Sailor and family member support service that is easy to access and available 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, 365 days a year. Whether you need help with a problem or just more information on an issue, chances are you will find Navy One Source a valuable resource.

Navy One Source consultants, backed by a large research team, can find you resources personalized to meet your needs. The Navy One Source web site is interactive and contains valuable information concerning many issues you face in your military and civilian life. The web site resource room contains free booklets, audiotapes and CDs, you can order and keep.

One Source "is a revolutionary augmentation to the family services we currently have on military installations around the world," John M. Molino, deputy undersecretary of defense for military community and family policy explained during an interview with the Pentagon Channel and American Forces Press Service.

Each service had its own One Source program, and the DoD will soon bring them together under one roof called Military One Source, Molino noted.

He noted that it's intended to complement assistance offered to military families by the services. Molino said Military One Source "leverages technology and enables DoD to provide assistance to families and service members via the Internet or a toll-free telephone number."

So, how do you access Navy One Source? In Guantanamo Bay, you can dial DSN 3999 from any telephone for a no charge call. The web site is www.navyonesource.com; the user ID is Navy, and the password is sailor. You can pick up brochures or get more information by the Fleet and Family Support Center (FFSC) at 4141.
